Fall Showing Expectations

Southeast Michigan sellers are seeing fewer buyers walk through their doors. September showings per listing were down 24% from a year ago in Oakland County, 23% in Macomb and 13% in Wayne. Livingston held nearly steady, down just 2%.

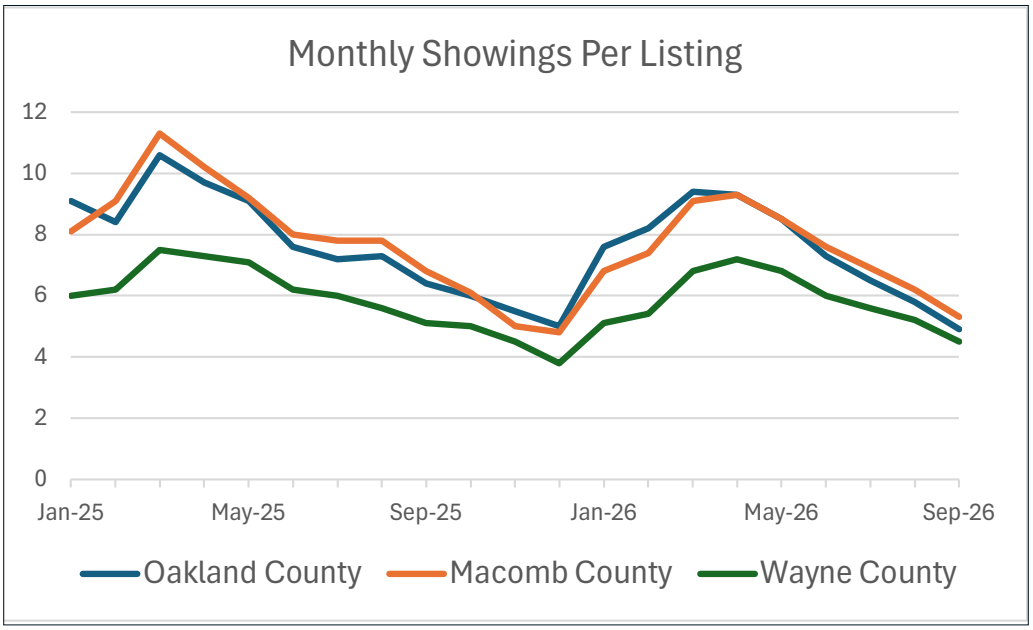

This is more than the normal slowdown from spring to fall. These comparisons measure September against September. In Oakland and Macomb, listings averaged roughly three visits for every four received last year.

For agents, the distinction matters. A seller getting fewer showings than a neighbor did last year may be experiencing the broader slowdown. A seller getting fewer showings than comparable homes competing today needs a closer review of price, presentation and showing access.

The response should also depend on what buyers are doing. Few visits mean the home is struggling to attract attention. Visits without offers mean buyers are looking but have not found enough reason to act. Buyer feedback and competing listings can help identify what needs to change.

For buyers, lighter traffic may provide more time to compare homes and more room to negotiate. But county averages cannot tell them whether a particular property will draw competing offers.

The useful seller conversation is: "Are we attracting our share of today's buyers—and what are those buyers telling us?" That gives agents and clients a clearer basis for deciding whether to stay the course or make an adjustment.
